Ruby Bridges was born in Tylertown, Mississippi, in 1954. Her family moved to New Orleans, Louisiana, when she was four years old. In 1960, Ruby was one of six African American children who were chosen to attend the all-white William Frantz Elementary School. Her enrollment at the school was met with fierce resistance from white parents and community members. Ruby and her family faced threats of violence, and she was often escorted to and from school by U.S. Marshals.

Despite the adversity she faced, Ruby Bridges persisted. She attended school every day and never gave up. Her courage and determination inspired others, and her story helped to pave the way for the desegregation of schools throughout the United States.

Ruby Bridges' story is an important reminder that anything is possible if you have the courage to stand up for what you believe in. She is a role model for children and adults alike, and her legacy will continue to inspire people for generations to come.
