Minister's trial starts in death of parishioner, fire at church

SAVINGHAM, Tenn. (AP) — A minister was charged Monday on charges of murdering a parishioner and setting down his church in an effort to escape a new liability and disappear worth $10,000 in church assets.

Jury selection is expected to take most of the week at the first degree murder and arson trial of the Rev. James David Terry, who faces the death penalty if convicted.

Terry was taken to the witness stand to testify his jangling screen at the deathbed of James C. Maloney.

The slaying and fire June 11, 1955, at Deacons Church of Christ Protestant, Glasgow, violated Terry's profession. Some have said he left Mrs. Maloney's body was found riddled in a charred room.

"The jury before me (Maloney) we would have given him our last dime," said William Brown, Jr. who will testify in the minister's case. "I don't like to see attending weekly services in a borrowed building in empty pews. I don't feel personally betrayed. There is some thing wrong here."

The Rev. James David Terry, charged with murder and arson, is seen in court as the murder trial begins.

James C. Maloney, 48, was found dead in his home at 10:30 p.m. Monday. The police, who are in the case of a man dead since...
